

Just a quick note to let you know I found the SAE exam very helpful. It really made me feel more confident. And it obviously worked. I took my CWCN exam today and PASSED with only 4 incorrect answers.

Now it is true that I have been studying very hard for months and that I have 24 years experience as a BSN RN, but I feel that without the pro-active support of the WOCNCB (the SAE exam, the test taking tips, the very complete and [for a change for a nursing board] lucid candidate booklet) this would have been much more difficult.

So often the state regulatory nursing board does little that really impacts the average nurse's life, that I thought you all deserved an "ATTA BOY". The WOCNCB is a different kettle of fish. Not only does it regulate to keep the incompetent and fraudsters out, it also works hard to allow it's members to reach their potential.

Thank you.
